Lawrence, KS: Today, Googols of Learning announced that Amy Gottschamer, Executive Director, and Shanna Todd, Administrative Director have both graduated from Champlain College of Burlington, VT, having been awarded Masters' degrees in Early Childhood Education with a specialization in Administration. After two-and-a-half years studying early childhood curriculum, theory, environment, special needs, community & family, observation & documentation, and qualitative research; and taking courses in human resource, finance, leadership, and mentoring, they were granted their M.Ed. degrees.

"This was about taking Googols of Learning to the highest level we can. Post-graduate higher education gave us the tools and information we needed to really 'set the standard in early childhood education' in Lawrence," said Amy Gottschamer, Executive Director. "We want to model the importance of formal higher education to our staff and demonstrate to parents that we try to instill a life-long love of learning in their children by creating that culture in our school."

"I believe that by having two directors with M.Ed. degrees in Early Childhood, Googols of Learning can implement a program of the highest quality, demonstrate what early childhood education professionals look like, and offer a unique experience to the families of young children in Lawrence, KS," said Shanna Todd.

Googols has been open 10 years this June and completion of these degrees is the next step in their vision.
